How to Use this Book

Random tables are a game master's best friend.

Running a role-playing game requires a game master to make numerous decisions nearly every moment of a session.

As a GM you should be focused on story and role-playing, not extraneous details. That's where random tables become your best friend.

Use these random tables to take the pressure off and save your decisions for more important things.

Keep this book of random tables nearby for when your players do something unexpected.

Some game masters like to use random tables to fill rooms and places with items during their preparation time. Others allow the players to roll on the tables only when an item is needed or a situation is encountered.

However you use them, make sure you use them to lighten your load and cut down prep time while running a session.

In this little book, you will find random tables with mundane or even worthless items intermingled with useful or valuable items. These tables are great when your players search rooms or investigate areas.

You will also find tables with encounters and situations because players always do the unexpected, and you will need something to throw at them.

Also, included are several tables of names. These lists come in handy when your players meet non-player characters during their adventures. Never fumble for a name, simply roll on one of the tables.

I hope you find these tables as useful as I have. Good adventuring!
