How to Use this Book

Welcome to the fourth book in my series of random 1D100 table books.

Random tables are a gamemaster's best friend. Whenever your players decide to turn left when you thought they would turn right or you just want to play an impromptu RPG session, random tables are a lifesaver.

Find the table in the book that best fits the situation in your game and roll the percentile dice. However, I prefer to have my players roll. It takes the pressure off of me as the GM.

This book is divided into four sections: Names, Encounters, Items & Things, and People & Characters.

In the Names section, you will find names for elves, halflings, dwarves, as well as dwarf clans. It is always a good idea to have a list of names on hand when running a session. You can have one ready at a moment's notice, so you don't break the atmosphere by fumbling for a name.

The Encounters section provides much fodder for random encounters. Add flavor to the session while your players are exploring underground locations, jungles, or areas near the sea. The section also includes encounters that may occur in an inn. While your players are fooling around at the inn you can give them some interesting things to do.

In the Items & Things section, you will find tons of fun items your players can search for and find. There is a huge list of odd magic items and other objects that could spawn a campaign. The bounty board is a quest machine by itself.

The People & Characters section is the most diverse section. It contains several tables for bonus critical hits or failure effects. There is a table of NPC descriptions, so you can populate your world seamlessly. Plus goals, mutations, and more.

Why spend hours prepping for a session? Use these tables to add details to any fantasy RPG session as you are playing.
